REPORT ON THE COURSE ON BASIC ENGLISH GRAMMAR

Since our students are from Bengali medium schools, they find it difficult to cope up with English at the undergraduate level. Many of them are proficient in their respective fields of study, but appear nervous and non-confident when it comes to facing interviews or addressing an academic gathering. The need to be able to speak fluently in English is the prime requirement of our students. As a first step, the faculties of the Department of English felt the urgency to teach them the basics of English Grammar, so that they can use the language for effective communication.

Teaching a language is possible only when the group of learners is small in size, when personal care can be taken to attend to each and every student. For this, we chose a group of 30 students initially. They were taught the basics of the English language, made to write and speak short but grammatically correct sentences and apply the rules of grammar when delineating their specific subjects. At the end of the course, all of them appeared for the written examination and came out successful.
